USE RIGHT VARIETY OF SPRING OATS

Andrew, Clarion, Newton, and Missouri 0-200 are the recommended spring oat varieties available to Virginia farmers for planting this year. There are many other varieties planted every spring; however, of those tested by the Virginia Agricultural Experiment Station, these four have consistently been the best yielders, Howard C. Potts, seed specialist, Virginia Agricultural Extension Service, says.

The popular fall- and winter-sown varieties, such as Atlantic, Arlington, Lee, and Forkedeer, usually will not give satisfactory yields when planted this late in the year. They need several periods of freezing weather before they will stool and head out properly. And since they need a longer growing season than the spring varieties, they are damaged more severely by disease and high temperature.

Certified seed of the four recommended varieties must come from outside Virginia and are not generally available, Potts said. Therefore it is very important that you know the source of the seed you are going to plant. If you use a mixture of winter oat varieties, you can expect a reduced yield and some difficulty in harvesting because of uneven maturity.

To obtain maximum yields from spring oats, a sound, fertilization program must be followed. The application of 400 to 600 pounds per acre of either a 5-20-10 or a 10 analysis fertilizer at time will give near max

Rare Civil War Letter Describes Action In 1864

A most interesting letter from a Civil War soldier has come to the attention of The Times-Virginian. Sent to us by Mrs. T. M. Goldsby, Concord, Va., a member of the local U. D. C. Chapter, the letter was written Nov. 1, 1864, by Captain George W. Cherry, of Company D, 48th Alabama Regiment. He was the father-in-law of Mrs. Goldsby's sister. This is one of many items in possession of Mr. and Mrs. Goldsby, pertaining to Southern History. The letter referred to above is copied below:

Near Tuscumbiba, Ala., Nov. 1, 1864.

Dear Fannie,

I, at last, get one more chance to have a letter mailed and I gladly avail myself of it.

We marched into Tuscumbia yesterday and I suppose will stay here a day or two for the purpose of washing up, sending off the sick, issuing shoes, clothing, etc., preparatory to another hard tramp in some direction and as usual, nobody knows which way. Genl. Hood succeeds in always fooling everybody in his plans, generally goes where nobody thinks he will go. I went you my last letter from Gadsden, Ala. Since then we have been marching hard all the while except one day we stopped at Decatur, Ala. We went from Gadsden to the Sand Mountain and marched westward on the top of it until we got opposite Decatur. We then went and attacked the fortifications there as if we intended to take the place, but while our Corps was pretending to be doing the other two Corps were marching still down the Tennessee River. It is thought by a great many we will cross the river at Florence, Lee's Corps is now there as is also our Pontoon train.

I have stood the trip thus far very well but am very tired of acting cavalry without a horse. I have not heard from home since Bob Johnson came to us and am afraid if we do not stop it will be a long while before I do. You will please continue to write just as though I got them regularly and maybe I will get some of them.

We have suffered considerably for rations a part of the while, but have managed to get enough beef, cord and parched corn to keep us in good health. We had corn rations issued to us one day, two ears to the man. I guess they thought that we were doing a horse's service so we needed a horse's feed. We sometimes get an old piece of tin of which to make a grater and grate the corn to make mush or bread and I assure you we make good bread from the grated meal.

The poor soldier frequently marches 25 miles, carries his blanket, gun and cap box and what little clothing he has, gets to camp after dark, goes off to some corn field, maybe a mile, gets a few ears of corn, comes back, makes himself a log heap, sits down by the fire, gets out his old piece of tin, grates enough corn to make him a hoecake, cooks it, eats it alone, lies down and takes a short nap by day, when he is aroused to march another 25 miles. It is astonishing how much a man can endure. I fully believe he can stand more than a horse.

We are camped within 300 yards of the Tennessee River, from which we get the water we drink. The water is as clear and sweet as spring water, notwithstanding the poor soldier washing his shirt, his body, and his feet in it — one will be washing his feet and another filling his canteen nearby and each good humoredly chatting with the other, or bawling to scare the horses as they are brought to water.

May God help and protect us."

Health and Beauty

A plump well-fed baby is always an object of admiration. As the child grows, he lengthens out and loses his "baby fat." During his early school years his great amount of activity uses up all his food in supplying the necessary energy. But the time comes, as he approaches adolescence, when he slows down a bit. Some increase in weight at the onset of adolescence is normal.

This is the time when the girl's mother often begins to be upset especially when she finds that her daughter's figure no longer follows the sizes in the stores. The girl is too old for little girl dresses, and too young for the misses styles.

Anyone who has concerned himself with girls of this age and condition knows that the explanation is usually just normal craving for food, plus the fun of eating those between-meal snacks.

All phases of child - rearing demand patience, but the overweight situation requires the most of all. Normal growth and the dawning of self - consciousness of the adolescent are both on the side of the ambitious parents.

The psychological side should not be overlooked. It is true that some children and adults seek the solace of eating and drinking when in a troubled state of mind. Perhaps the glandular system is at fault. Only a doctor can tell about this.

It is very hard to make a child see that it is wrong to over-eat because it makes him fat and not make him over-conscious of how he looks.

However, it can be done by stressing the health angle. Go to any lengths to help your child develop good eating habits when he's young. Chances are good that he will keep them all his life.

We have long since learned to let some people talk without interruption; the conversation ends so much sooner.
